

GOODE OUT AGAIN AND LOOKING WELL

Expresses Much Regret at Inability to Attend Constitutional Convention Reunion.

DANIEL GOING NORTH SOON

Will Deliver Address in Massachusetts on Life and Character of Senator Hoar.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31.—Hon. John Goode, who has been confined to his room at the home of his son in this city, is out again, and looks about as well as he did before his attack of the grip. Mr. Goode represented a number of claimants named in the omnibus claims bill which passed the last Congress, though he failed to have a number of claims provided for. Mr. Goode expressed his deep regret to-day at his inability to be present at the recent reunion and banquet of members of the Constitutional Convention over which he presided. He was far too unwell to think of attempting to make the trip to Richmond.

"It has been a source of the greatest possible gratification to me," he said, "to see how popular the Constitution has become. I feared, after there was evidenced such great diversity of opinion in the convention over so many subjects, that the result of our labors would utterly fail to commend itself to the people of the State. I find, however, that the people come to see, more and more, that our labors were not in vain, and that the work we did deserves the approval of the best people of Virginia. I was a distinguished member of the convention, who was in the city yesterday, expressed somewhat similar opinion. He strongly opposed the corporation commission feature of the Constitution. 'I feared very much that the result of having a commission to control all corporations in the State would be to embarrass and hamper efforts to develop the resources of Virginia by means of corporate organization,' he said, 'I am almost at that point where I can say that it was wise to put the corporations of the State under the control of the commission. I feel sure this would have been accomplished by a commission composed of as good men as those who are now on it. It has done good work for all concerned, and no mistake was made when we adopted the commission plan for the control of corporations. But there is always a danger that the men appointed to the commission will be irresponsibly prejudiced against corporations, or that they will be controlled by them. It is of prime importance that the selections for the commission be made with the utmost care, so that, in addition to getting honest men for the places, we also have men of the judicial temperament who will see that justice is done the shipper as well as the carrier.'

The Virginia Campaign.

The Virginia primary campaign for the senatorship and the governorship is on the tongue of every Virginian who comes to Washington these days. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that few of them admit they themselves are taking any active part in the campaign, but it is most noticeable, that while they disclaim any interest as to the outcome, they are always ready to discuss the subject at any length. It is doubtful if the men who are at the head of affairs for various candidates realize how greatly matters are mixed in Virginia this year, politically speaking. Factional lines are drawn, on one side, but not exactly according to popularly conceived notions. One of the most surprising features of the campaign, one commented on by many who have had opportunities of observing, is the large number of men who are going to vote for Senator Martin for the Senate, and for Mr. Willard for the governorship; and the number who will vote for Governor Montague for the Senate, and Mr. Swanson for the governorship. While there is no earthly reason why this should not be so, those familiar with Virginia politics for the past few years somewhat naturally expect an entirely different alignment. The fact that Mr. Willard was on the ticket with Governor Montague four years ago, naturally causes one to expect those who vote for the Governor for the Senate to be, in every case, for Mr. Willard for the governorship, while those who supported this ticket when it was before the Democratic convention of 1899, are expected to be for Mr. Swanson now. But the fact is as stated. It makes it certain that there can be no wise combination effected between a candidate for the governorship and a candidate for the senatorship. One of the gubernatorial candidates indicated recently that he thoroughly appreciated this fact by the declaration, "I am making no man's fight but my own." Talk of combinations is idle, but it is not heard among those who are the best informed as to what is going on in Virginia.

Daniel to Speak on Hoar.

that obtained between Senator Hoar and Senator Daniel for many years prior to the death of the Massachusetts statesman, renders the Virginia senator peculiarly fitted to emphasize Mr. Hoar's character. For many years Mr. Hoar was exceedingly unpopular at the South because of his unreserved dislike of the Southern people, apparently, but in later years there was manifested a decided change in his attitude. A speech, delivered by Senator Hoar in Chicago in the spring of 1903 contained the finest tribute to Southern character which has ever been paid by an American not born in the Southern section of the Union. That alone would entitle him to the high place he occupies in the memory of Senator Daniel and other representative Southern men.

A prominent treasury official told a story to-day concerning Senator Hoar, which illustrates the attitude of leading Republicans towards him in the latter years of his life. Mr. Hoar, soon after the Spanish war, made a speech in the Senate, which was possibly the most bitter attack ever made upon a Republican administration. He denounced the policy of President McKinley (towards the Philippines, which, he declared, threatened the perpetuity of our institutions. The following day, several Republican senators were at the White House, and with them was the official mentioned above. The speech of Senator Hoar was the only topic discussed by the callers, and he was criticized most severely. Finally, President McKinley interposed a word.

"Do not be too hard on Senator Hoar," said Mr. McKinley, in those quiet tones he always used, while his eyes twinkled. "You must remember that while he always gives his advice to the Democrats he invariably gives his vote to the Republicans."

Mr. Hoar, in the late years of his life, opposed several features of Republican policy, and some of the ablest of his public utterances were efforts to prevent the taking of steps which he deemed in violation of the spirit of the Constitution. But he always voted with his party when the last word was said, and the roll was called on the pending question.

Marshaling His Forces.

Before another week has passed United States Senator Thomas S. Martin will have effected the nucleus of his organization. This, it is reliable understood, will embrace a number of prominent business men, and men of means, who have various interests, including laboring men, merchants and others. Just when, where or in what form the organization will be has not been ascertained. It is believed that a conference will be held one day early next week at the senator's headquarters.

SINGLE PRIMARY IS NOT POPULAR

Will Hold Separate Poll for Municipal Candidates.

PAY POLL TAXES SLOWLY

Suit of J. D. Patton & Co. Argued in Hustings Court.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
PETERSBURG, VA., March 31.—A separate primary for local nominations is the choice of the leading Democrats of Petersburg. The opinion that a single primary in the campaign would be unfair to municipal candidates largely prevails. That sentiment, however, is not accompanied by favor or opposition to any particular State candidate. The primary question will be settled for this city at a meeting of the Democratic Central Committee next Monday night. Petersburg voters are paying poll taxes very slowly. At present the qualified list shows a large decrease.

The suit of J. D. Patton & Co., of Richmond, against R. Wachman, administrator of Helen Lewelle's estate, was argued to-day before Judge Mullen in the Hustings Court by Bartlett Roper, Jr., for the plaintiffs, and George Mason, for the defendants. Patton and Company have a claim against the estate amounting to about a hundred dollars, which defendant alleges has been paid.

JUDGE LEWIS SPEAKS.

Graphically Pictures Men and Events of American Revolution. A number of Richmond's prominent men have spoken on timely subjects before the senior classes of the High School in the past few months. Yesterday morning the pupils were fortunate in having Judge L. Lewis speak to them on "The Virginia Signers of the Declaration of Independence." Though the address had been prepared, as the Judge announced, for the Commonwealth Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and was therefore adapted to minds of maturer growth, the pupils showed by the interested attention with which they listened that they were quite capable of appreciating and enjoying this very instructive and able address.

In a clear and well modulated voice the speaker, with a few graphic strokes, pictured conditions in the colonies just previous to the Revolution, when none expected or wished the colonies to become independent of the mother country; when Benjamin Franklin said that among the colonies he had seen no man, drunk or sober, who desired separation.

Sketching lightly the events which led to a change in the attitude of the country, Judge Lewis told of the resolution of the Continental Congress; of the debate on it, and of the committee appointed to draft the Declaration; then, regretting the impossibility of giving more than an outline of lives so full of action, he yet centered in his short talk to grasp the salient points in the life of each, and to make each one stand out separate and distinct from his fellows. George Wythe, a distinguished jurist, the teacher of Thomas Jefferson, and John Marshall; Richard Henry Lee, the brilliant orator and man of letters; Thomas Jefferson, the most versatile of the Virginia statesmen; Thomas Nelson, the purest of patriots; Benjamin Harrison, Jr., the statesman whose posterity has given two Presidents to the nation; Francis Lightfoot Lee, of unusual gifts and modesty, and Carter Braxton, of high birth and great firmness, who dispensed hospitality with so lavish a hand as to make Virginia famous; these men who had found the Virginia House of Burgesses a school of statesmanship, the speaker pushed in review. He closed by a splendid tribute to their work in the making of our country.

The pupils expressed their thanks by a rising vote, which was gracefully acknowledged by Judge Lewis.

DENY STORY TOLD BY NEGRO HORNSBY

Citizens of Yazoo City Tell Why Man Was Forced to Leave Town.

(By Associated Press.)
MEMPHIS, TENN., March 31.—A Commercial Appeal special from Yazoo City says:

The statement made by the negro, M. J. Hornsby, in his complaint at the White House, that he is prevented from holding a position in the postoffice here by reason of maltreatment by white citizens is denied here. Hornsby stood examination for a position in the local postoffice at a time when two clerkships were vacant. The examinations were passed by three negroes and one white man. One of the vacancies was filled by Lee Cummins, a white man. The three negroes were advised by members of their own race not to accept positions in the office, as their acceptance might prove distasteful to the white residents, and possibly cause trouble. Two of the negroes then withdrew their applications, stating that they desired positions as mail carriers, but not as clerks. Hornsby applied to Postmaster John P. Bennett for a position as clerk, but in his writing, which drew his application, he being warned by white residents that his appointment would not meet with the approval of the white people of the community. At that time, it is alleged, Hornsby was carrying a loaded revolver, and when he was learned he was instructed to leave town at once or be arrested on the charge of carrying concealed weapons. Hornsby immediately left the city. The pistol, it is said, is being held as evidence against Hornsby should he return to Yazoo City.

MRS. HILL ILL.

Extraordinary Means to Expedite Her Journey to New York.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
NORFOLK, VA., March 31.—Mrs. J. Hill, wife of the president of the Great Northern Railway Company, is very ill at Norfolk, Va., and extraordinary means are being resorted to to get her to New York for treatment without delay. The Florida Limited of the Seaboard, which makes no stops, save to change engines, will haul Mr. Hill's private car from Norfolk to New York on what it is believed will prove record time. The car, which is a Pullman, was used by the invalid and her noted husband will come North on the Seaboard Flyer. All the necessary general passenger agents and other officials in charge of the divisions over which the car will pass in its race against death have been instructed to give special vigilance to see that it is expedited.
